Significant challenges are faced by women scientists around the world, particularly in countries where tradition, religion and politics have created gender and other barriers to professional development and career advancement.

The Women in World Neuroscience (WWN) Committee is hosting a discussion and social at SONA 2009, to assess the current situation for women neuroscientists at all career levels, including students, across Africa, and develop ways that IBRO and WWN can assist and mentor women neuroscientists now and in the future.

All SONA participants, men and women alike, are welcome to attend.
